Determining whether to use a z value or a t value

The principal distinction is whether the population standard deviation $\sigma$ is known or must be estimated with the sample value $s$.
Strictly speaking, we should use a \( t \). Some practitioners may use a \( z \) for any large sample case.